

The Russell House is Always Bustling

Authors: Blake Turner, Brendon Marshall, Adams Keefer, Michael Smigo

Problem Statement:

The Russell House is facing a crisis right now. Between low labor participation and students believing that the Russell House is the only place on campus they are able to eat. This is creating astronomical wait times for food in the Russell House. Solving this problem is urgent to allow a more enjoyable dining experience for students and workers.

Who is Experiencing the Problem?

Students/Faculty/Food Workers at the University of South Carolina

What is the Problem?

Extreme wait times for food around campus.

Where (When) does the Problem Produce Itself?

In Russell House at lunch and dinner time.

Why does it Matter?

On certain days, it's so busy in the Russell House that students cannot go in there and get a meal before their next class.
